The team behind the fund

The fund is managed by an experienced team led by Paola Binns, who serves as Head of Sterling Credit at Royal London Asset Management (RLAM). Paola brings over 25 years of experience in bond markets, having joined RLAM in 2007 from Credit Suisse Asset Management, where she managed sterling credit assets. Her expertise spans various asset classes, including European corporate bonds, government bonds, and emerging market debt.

Paola Binns

Paola is supported by Eric Holt, a veteran of over 40 years in the credit markets. Eric brings expert knowledge in managing corporate bond portfolios and plays a key role in overseeing RLAM's bond strategies. He has been with Royal London Asset Management since 1999.

Eric Holt

The fund primarily invests in short-dated investment-grade corporate bonds, with a focus within the financial sector, emphasising issuers with strong credit fundamentals to balance returns and risk. By focusing on bonds with shorter maturities, the fund aims to reduce volatility and interest rate sensitivity while generating steady income.

The fund is renowned for its rigorous credit selection process and in-depth research, supported by an impressive long-term track record of performance. The fund currently generates a yield of 6.7%.

The team behind the fund

The fund focuses on European asset-backed securities (ABS). The fund is designed to provide income and preserve capital through investments in high-quality ABS, including residential and commercial mortgages, auto loans, and other types of secured debt. The securities in the portfolio are focused on credit quality.

The fund's investment strategy prioritises the selection of securities backed by robust assets and institutions, with a particular focus on those with a proven ability to repay principal. Given the relatively low-interest rate duration (around 0.10 years), the fund's strategy is well-positioned to weather interest rate changes.

In terms of sector exposure, the fund maintains a diverse portfolio across several ABS sectors, such as, residential mortgage-backed securities (RMBS), collateralized loan obligations (CLOs), and consumer ABS. This diversification helps mitigate risks and enhance potential returns.

The fund currently generates a very healthy yield of 6.2% and performed exactly as we would hope since the inclusion in your portfolios - steady returns and low volatility. We expect this fund to continue to perform well, particularly with central banks continuing to cut interest rates.

The team behind the fund

Prior to joining Jupiter in January 2024, Adrian was a fund manager at GAM since 2017. Prior to that he was at Artemis for 13 years, managing a £10bn UK income franchise. Before that he was a fund manager of UK equities at Société Générale Asset Management for four years.

We first met Adrian & Chris in London in December 2022 as part of a review of the existing manager blend in our UK equity allocation and were immediately impressed by their knowledge and capability of the team.

The team run a disciplined strategy, focusing on investment across the UK market cap spectrum. Companies with sound balance sheets and sensible capital allocation are vital. There is a strong focus on valuation, ensuring not to overpay for companies.

UK stocks have been trading at a discount compared to their international peers for several years. This attractive valuation has prompted companies to repurchase their shares and spurred a rise in takeovers by international private equity firms. With the macroeconomic environment improving and inflation returning to the 2% target, we believe UK equities are well-positioned for growth and should be a strategic component of a globally diversified portfolio.

The team behind the fund

The strategy targets income generation and capital growth over five years. It predominantly invests in UK small- and mid-cap companies outside the FTSE 100 index, ensuring a diverse portfolio focused on dynamic growth opportunities. The fund's strategy capitalises on structural market trends and less crowded areas of the market, which often offer higher potential returns but come with increased risk.

The portfolio is well-diversified across sectors, with a particular focus on financials, business services, and consumer industries. Significant holdings include established names such as GlaxoSmithKline, Intermediate Capital Group, and XPS Pensions Group, alongside emerging opportunities in smaller firms like Smart Metering Systems and Moneysupermarket.

The fund is currently generating an attractive dividend yield of 4.1%. Reinvesting dividends creates a compounding effect by using the dividends to purchase additional shares, which then generate their own dividends. Over time, this cycle accelerates wealth accumulation, especially in growth companies where reinvested dividends benefit from rising share prices. This effect is amplified during market dips, as reinvested dividends buy more shares at lower prices, enhancing future returns.

The team behind the fund

The fund is co-managed by Tom O'Hara and Tom Lemaigre. O'Hara joined Janus Henderson in 2018 as a research analyst and became a Portfolio Manager on the European Equities Team in 2020. Prior to this he worked as an equity research analyst specialising in metals and mining at Exane BNP Paribas (2016), Redburn (2013), and Citigroup (2010). He started his career as a metal's analyst at Metal Bulletin Research (2008) and in treasury at Northern Rock plc (2006).

Lemaigre also joined Janus Henderson as a research analyst in 2018, becoming a Portfolio Manager on the European Equities Team in 2022. Prior to this he was with Pensato Capital LLP, from 2016, working as an analyst covering the consumer sector. Tom began his career as an equity sales and research analyst with Redburn (Europe) Limited in 2014.

The team believe investment opportunities can be captured through correctly anticipating change and inflection points in companies and industries. They are not wedded to one investment style, instead, they look to shift the style bias within the portfolio between growth and value depending on the market environment and opportunity set, but always within the core category. Ultimately, they seek to add value at two levels: idiosyncratic stock selection and, more sparingly, sector theme selection.

The team behind the fund

The Baillie Gifford American Fund focuses on investing in growth-oriented US equities. It primarily targets capital growth by investing in large-cap stocks. It focuses on identifying exceptional growth opportunities driven by innovation, structural change, and strong business fundamentals.

The investment team comprises of 4 co-managers who are supported by 65 global investors covering US stocks. A unique aspect of the research is that it benefits from private company expertise with nearly half of the portfolio holdings originally researched when private.

The fund is focussed on investing in cutting edge growth investments with the view that superior profit growth leads to outperformance over the long run. To put this in context, they are looking for companies that can return at least 2.5x's or more than their starting share price. This tends to be quite a limited universe of stocks and therefore the portfolio is concentrated on 30-50 best ideas with a long-term investment horizon of at least 5-years.

Given the growth bias, the portfolio tends to have most exposures in some of the more innovative sectors including technology, e-commerce, healthcare and consumer discretionary names.

The team behind the fund

Lead Portfolio manager, Cormac Weldon has over 30-years investment experience managing US equities. Cormac and co-manager Olivia Micklem are supported by a dedicated team of sector analysts researching stocks across the market cap spectrum.

The team combines bottom-up fundamental stock research with macro and thematic analysis to identify stocks with an asymmetric return profile. The team employ a dynamic 'style agnostic' investment approach searching for companies that possess an attractive upside to downside ratio. Any company that is under consideration for investment must have a minimum of 2:1 upside/downside return potential.

The investment style is balanced and will rotate holdings across styles including growth, value, recovery and cyclical stocks. This flexible approach has allowed the team to generate strong relative returns in different market environments, regardless of style.

The team believe US small caps are particularly attractive given 1) they have less Wall Street analyst coverage therefore are inefficiently priced 2) they are trading a historical discounts versus large caps while 3) having higher growth potential and 3) are more domestically geared to the US economy which should benefit from Trump's 'America First' agenda.

The team behind the fund

The US Income strategy is managed by a team of 3 portfolio managers with average tenure at the firm of over 20 years. They are supported by a team of just under 20 dedicated sector analysts. While the fund is relatively new (launched in September 2022) the strategy has been managed by the team since 2016 and run in an identical fashion.

The investment approach is totally benchmark and style agnostic, focussing on several key objectives (i.e. growing yield, solid business model, good downside protection). All investments must pay a dividend to be considered, and the overall aim is to build a portfolio that will have an aggregate yield of 0.5% to 1.0% more than the S&P 500 benchmark. Quality is a major focus for the team and therefore the portfolio may gravitate between growth and value styles as the opportunity set evolves

The portfolio is reasonably concentrated with around 50 names and the team have traditionally taken a long-term investment horizon of 5-10 years depending on the opportunity set. At this point, valuations for income-oriented stocks are trading at historic lows and the team believes this asset class should be rewarded as the market starts to refocus away from growth toward value and income generation.

Stuart Rhodes has led the M&G Global Dividend Fund since its inception on 18 July 2008, drawing on over 17 years of experience in global equity income. Kathryn Leonard joined him as co-manager on 17 June 2024, bringing fresh perspectives from her prior role in M&G's income team and bolstering the fund's research depth and stock-selection process.

The fund's style is anchored in relentless dividend growth rather than chasing high yields; at least 70 percent of assets are invested in global equities across diverse geographies, sectors, and market-cap segments. This dividend-growth philosophy reflects the view that rising payouts signal corporate health, shareholder commitment, and financial strength.

In their September 2025 Monthly Fund Review, Rhodes and Leonard maintained a cautiously optimistic outlook. They highlighted opportunities in high-quality dividend growers capable of sustaining cash flows amid tightening monetary conditions, while remaining mindful of valuation dispersion across regions. Their focus remains on companies with robust balance sheets and sustainable payout ratios to navigate potential market volatility and inflationary pressures.

The team behind the fund

The Polar Capital Biotechnology Fund, managed by David Pinniger and a team of eight sector specialists, was launched on 31 October 2013 as a vehicle for equity investors targeting cutting-edge medical innovation across the global biotechnology ecosystem.

Biotech has a sector has come under real pressure over the last few years. Rising inflation has lead to higher interest rate environment in order to combat, which has seen the cost of financing increase for the sector leading to real headwinds. As we sit today those headwinds have gone away. We have lower interest rates, meaning cost of financing is lower. Couple with this the valuations on the sector are cheaper than post Covid & the Financial crisis. Between 25-30% of biotech companies are trading below the cash levels that they have on their balance sheet, at the same time there is a great amount of innovation coming through (partly driven by AI), particularly in the field of oncology. All these factors we think makes the sector look very compelling.

Polar are a specialists in this sector - through good times & bad for the sector they have performed very well through their bottom-up stock selection. Selectivity is key as this sector is not without risk, but with a steady hand at the tiller we should be able to navigate things well & take advantage of the opportunities we see in the space.

David Pinniger

"Oncology is still a big focus area, in the rare disease space. Neuromuscular diseases is a very popular area right now with some big breakthroughs recently. There is an awful lot going on and it is quite diverse, which makes us very excited for the next 12, 18 months and beyond"

Gerard joined Polar Capital in January 2005 and has been manager of the Polar Capital Japan Value Fund, formerly Japan Alpha Fund, since its launch in 2012. Prior to joining Polar Capital, Gerard worked in the Japanese equity team at Schroder Investment Management.

Chris joined Polar Capital in January 2012 as a Japanese equity analyst, prior to which he gained five years' experience working in accountancy. Chris has been co-manager of the Japan Value Fund since the strategy launch.

The Fund will apply a 'value' based stock picking approach, investing in a concentrated portfolio of large, medium and small capitalisation companies that exercise a significant part of their economic activities in Japan or are organised under the laws of Japan.

During a recent meeting, we covered various topics, including recent politics volatility, fund positioning, and a macroeconomic update, noting that the portfolio is nearing at its lowest allocation to large-cap stocks. Chris also shared insights from his recent trip to Japan, where he reviewed existing holdings and assisted them with the process involving the Tokyo Stock Exchange (TSE).

Both managers joined M&G in 2019 but have been managing Asian equity strategies for over 25 years including both traditional and hedged (i.e. Long/Short) portfolios. The team consists of 12 portfolio managers and dedicated research analysts. This includes local and regional specialists based in London, Singapore, Hong Kong and Mumbai.

The investment process is bottom up in nature and style agnostic aiming to deliver 'all weather' returns over a market cycle regardless of prevailing styles. Risk control is a major feature of the strategy with the aim of trying to limit. The aim is to generate the bulk of returns through stock selection while avoiding taking large country or sector bets against the benchmark. The portfolio is reasonably concentrated typically holding around 60 names.

At a recent meeting, the team were upbeat about fundamentals and valuations across Asia and are seeing great opportunities particularly in China, Taiwan and South Korea.

The team behind the fund

The Baillie Gifford Emerging Markets Growth Fund is a fund that seeks to deliver long-term capital growth by investing in companies across emerging markets. It focuses on identifying exceptional growth opportunities driven by innovation, structural change, and strong business fundamentals.

The fund has a high active share (71%) and is notably overweight in South and Central America, with significant holdings in Brazil (14.1%) and Mexico (3.2%). The team's investment in these countries highlights a conviction in the growth potential of Latin American economies, driven by consumer demand, infrastructure development, and digital transformation across the region. This positioning allows the fund to capture the upside potential of markets that are often underrepresented in emerging markets indices, providing a differentiated growth opportunity.

William Sutcliffe, head of Emerging Markets, noted the rise of the "Global South" and its increasing influence in the global economy. Countries in this group are becoming more integrated into global trade and finance, and this shift is likely to drive economic growth in the coming years. Sutcliffe points out that companies within emerging markets are increasingly able to compete on a global scale, especially in industries like digital technology, fintech, and renewable energy

Andrew Stobart

"Emerging markets are made up of some of the fastest growing economies in the world. They comprise cutting-edge companies that dominate domestic and export markets from a diverse set of countries. The team behind the fund

Ned Naylor-Leland has been running the fund since inception in March 2016. He is supported by 2 dedicated analysts (Joe Lunn & Chris Mahoney) who both have 'hands on' management experience at mining companies before moving the finance sector.

The manager believes that allocation to precious metals is best achieved through an actively managed approach, combining allocation to physical gold & silver as well as shares of mining companies.

Positioning will largely depend on where the manager sees opportunity in the cycle. As a rule of thumb, physical bullion tends to be much less volatile than mining companies and gold is typically less volatile than silver. So in a defensive scenario, the portfolio will have a higher allocation to physical gold (roughly 50% of the portfolio). Conversely, in a more bullish scenario, the portfolio will tend to have higher exposure to miners (c. 85%) and more of a skew to silver.

The manager is currently very bullish the precious metal sector and has positioned the portfolio more aggressively. He believes there is strong case for precious metals now based on a number of factors including political uncertainty and the trend for Central Banks to 'de-dollarise'. The asset class should also provide strong inflation protection.

Ned Naylor-Leland joined the company in 2015 and manages the Jupiter Gold & Silver Fund (formerly Merian). He has nearly two decades of experience in precious metals investing, having founded a dedicated monetary metals fund in 2009 at Quilter Cheviot. Ned began his career at Smith & Williamson and graduated from the University of Bristol in 1998 with a BA (Hons) in Spanish.

He later co-managed the Investec global energy fund, growing it to $3.5 billion. Will joined Guinness in 2007 after six years at PwC, where he specialized in assurance and valuation.

He qualified as a Chartered Accountant in 2003 and holds a Master's degree in Geography from Cambridge.

The Guinness Sustainable Energy Fund focuses on companies driving global decarbonisation, targeting four sub-sectors: Displacement (efficient energy use), Electrification (e.g., EVs), Installation (sustainable energy equipment), and Generation (renewable energy production). The fund's universe includes around 250 companies with market capitalisations over $500 million.

Its investment process combines top-down analysis of energy prices, technology, policy, and demand with bottom-up stock selection based on valuation, quality, and momentum. The portfolio of 30 equally weighted positions reduces stock-specific risk, with flexible sector weights and over 99% active share compared to the MSCI World Index. The team behind the fund

Pietro Nicholls is the lead Portfolio Manager on the RM Alternative Income fund, supported by James Robson and the broader management team.

The fund can invest both across both equities and bonds, which the manager will utilise depending on the opportunity set.

UK infrastructure as an asset class has had headwinds over the last few years with higher inflation and interest rates. We sit at a point today where inflation is moving to the Bank of England target level (2%), and interest rates have been cut now that inflation looks less problematic.

In the recent budget, the Labour government reemphasised their commitment and capital expenditure into mission critical UK infrastructure. At the same time, companies that Pietro invests in have been consistently reporting strong earnings and cashflow. We are seeing an increasing number of mergers and acquisitions (M&A) across the infrastructure space, which highlights the cheap valuations that exists in the sector, and the highly cashflow generative nature of the underlying businesses.

The fund is generating an income of nearly 7%, which provides a strong annual cashflow, particularly interesting for clients looking to draw income from their portfolio.

James Robson

“There is a fundamental disconnect between public and private markets. Private markets recognise the cheap valuations and the long-term government backed nature of the cashflows of the infrastructure businesses. With inflation and interest rates falling, this will again, start to feed through to public markets”

The team behind the fund

Nick Scullion & Aqid Hashamali are co-managers on the UK Infrastructure Income Fund.

UK infrastructure as an asset class has had headwinds over the last few years with higher inflation and interest rates. We sit at a point today where inflation is moving to the Bank of England's target level (2%), and interest rates have been cut now that inflation looks less problematic.

In the recent budget, the Labour government reemphasised their commitment and capital expenditure into mission critical UK infrastructure. At the same time companies that Nick & Aqid invests in, have been consistently reporting strong earnings and cashflow. We are seeing an increasing number of mergers and acquisitions (M&A) across the infrastructure space, which highlights the cheap valuations that exists in the sector, and the high cashflow generative nature of the underlying businesses.

The fund is generating an income of +5.5%, which provides a strong annual cashflow, particularly interesting for clients looking to draw income from their portfolio.

Long-term the asset class provides good diversification to multi asset portfolios and trades off the value and underlying cashflows of the underlying investments. The managers run a concentrated portfolio and can invest outside of the UK.

Aqid Hashamali

“Valuations across the UK infrastructure sector continue to look compelling. This is evidenced by the number of acquisitions across the asset class. We are seeing acquisitions across multiple sub-sectors like wind, utilities, healthcare & digital infrastructure”

Nick Scullion
